PREFACE.

IN a recent article in the Contemporary Review (August, 1895) I have shown that there is a close and constant dependence of the later Syriac commentators upon the Commentary which Ephrem Syrus made upon Tatian's Diatessaron; and I have found upon a further examination of these writers that it is possible to restore, sometimes exactly and sometimes approximately, large portions of the lost Syriac text of Ephrem, of which, up to the present, no fragment has been produced, and of which no representative is extant except the Armenian translation published by the Venetian fathers. As the recovery of these portions of the lost text not only elucidates the often doubtful meaning of the Armenian version, but also throws much light upon the history and fortunes of the composition, I have thought it worth while to commit the matter to the press in the hope that it will not be valueless to the critic even if a complete copy of the lost Syriac work should ultimately be recovered.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Commentary of Ephrem Syrus has, for various reasons, hardly met with the welcome and the elucidation which so famous a work deserves. Probably this is due, on the one side, to the fact that it was, until the present pages were written, extant only in Armenian, and the paucity of scholars who are acquainted with that language has reacted upon the subject, and caused a somewhat cold treatment of the book itself; but it is also due, in part, to the odium anti-theologicum which was provoked by the appearance of a work which was supposed, rightly or wrongly, to have an important bearing upon the history of the Canon; so that in some quarters there have been muttered rumours that the work was not rightly ascribed to the great Syrian father whose name it bears, while in other quarters of the critical world, especially those which lie most nearly adjacent to the city of Tübingen, it has been treated with a silence that must be, to the looker-on, who proverbially has the best view of the game, very significant.

Now it is unfortunate that this should be the case; unfortunate, I mean, that so many persons (myself amongst the number) are ignorant of Armenian, and that some persons (amongst whom I sincerely hope not to be included) limit their interest in a great work by the boundary of their theological or anti-theological predilections; and it is the more to be regretted, because the interest of the work does not lie primarily either in the fact that it is in Armenian, or in its possible bearing upon the evolution of the second century Gospels. Ephrem, himself, is a theological star of the first magnitude, and even if he should happen to be one of the worthiest representatives of Catholic orthodoxy, his windows always overlook the fields of the early unorthodox teachers, whom the Church has successively banned, but without the knowledge of whom the Church Historian cannot construct the map of the Ecclesiastical Empire or interpret the riddles which occur so constantly in the History of Dogma.

Not only so, but the stones which he throws at the Docetists, at Marcion, at Bardesanes and others are usually of the nature of replies; and the stones which had originally been thrown at his own party can often be found lying under his windows. He loves repartee, but as repartee requires, to make it intelligible, the preliminary remarks of the objector, it will be found that often, in Ephrem's pages, there can be recognized statements which were taken ex ore dubitantium, or have been extracted directly from heretical works. Marcion has, indeed, perished, but some Marcionite flies (often large ones) are in Ephrem's amber. A careful critic can often separate the two.

For example, in Ephrem's comment on Luke xi. 27 (ed. Mösinger, p. 122), the writer expressly tells us that he is quoting Marcion, and the margin of the MS. tells us that 'all this was said by Marcion.' The only question then is, how much is rightly to be included under the marks of quotation. Apparently we may isolate the following words:

'Blessed shall be the womb that bare thee.' Marcion says "By these words they only tempted him to see whether he was born in reality. And where it is said, 'Lo! thy mother and thy brethren seek thee' the same thing is signified. And further he gave them his body to eat."

The argument is that the body is a phantasm and the birth not real. For our Lord did not acknowledge the suggested relationships to mother and brethren. And Ephrem's reply is that if our Lord had wished to deny his nativity and human nature, he would not afterwards have claimed fraternity with disciples who were but men. And by a happy retort he compares the verse in which our Lord might be supposed to say 'Why callest thou me conceived and born' with that other much disputed text 'Why callest thou me good,' from which the Marcionites were in the habit of arguing and where Ephrem and others shew great skill in refuting them.

In another passage he is arguing with those who held with Marcion that Christ appeared suddenly in the synagogue at Nazareth, or as Tertullian puts it, that he came de caelo in synagogam. The dispute in such cases did not turn on the question of the genuineness of the portions of the Gospel which deal with the Nativity, for the Marcionite had no such account in his gospel; but it turned upon the words 'he went, as his custom was, into the synagogue.' And it was argued, not improperly, by the opponents of Marcion that these words were inconsistent with the theory of a sudden lapse from heaven. Accordingly, as I have elsewhere suggested<sup>1</sup>, the text of the Gospel at this point shews signs of having been tampered with in certain copies with a view to meeting the difficulty, either by getting rid of the 'custom' or by proving it to refer to other people or by erasing the words 'where he had been brought up.' Now it is interesting to find that the very words of Marcion on this point are preserved to us by Ephrem. And it appears that Marcion objects to this disputed word 'consuetudo.' The passage is as follows (Mösinger, p. 128):

Matt. xiii. 54. *He came into his own city and taught them in their synagogues...*This was written to confound the Marcionites: [because, that is, by teaching in his native place and by teaching in their synagogues the scripture implies previous residence and habitual teaching.]...Luke iv. 16. After these things he entered into their synagogue, as his custom was, on the Sabbath-day. [Here Marcion is supposed to intervene;] whence arises the custom to him who had only just arrived? He had but just come into Galilee: nor had he [even on the orthodox shewing] begun to preach outside the synagogue, [in which case the custom of preaching would have been established] but he began in the synagogue, (and we must either admit) as their worship requires, that he preached to them concerning their God, [the creator of the world] or else he would have had to preach outside the synagogues. [But if he preached about their God to them then this must have been what provoked their anger; nothing had passed between them before], and his visit to Bethsaida [so, according to Marcion, and not Nazareth] was only marked on their side by the suggestion that the physician should heal himself. This is not sufficient to explain their anger and their desire to throw him from the rock. [We must, therefore, allow that he had said things to them about their God, which provoked them, and this must have been the first occasion upon which such things were said.]

To which Ephrem replies (i) that if Christ had been in the habit of preaching against the God of the Old Testament, traces of it would be found elsewhere in the Gospel; (ii) that the very words which he used about a prophet being without honour in his own country imply his previous residence among them.

In this way we get glimpses of the character of the disputes between the Marcionite and the Catholic; we can reconstruct something of the argument, and we can collect the leading passages around which the discussion raged. Indeed it will often be found that the texts which Ephrem treats with the greatest fulness and variety are those which relate to the burning questions of the generation or century preceding his own; and the only difficulty lies in determining when he is speaking in his own person, and not quoting or personating a heretic.

Another case which he discusses is that in which the physical body of Christ was denied, for it appears that he enters into an argument with those who held that Christ's body was not natural, but had descended from heaven, perhaps by passing through the Virgin, as water through a tube, according to some Valentinian Gnostics. It is evident from Ephrem that such persons had made use of the expression in the Gospel of John, 'no man hath ascended into heaven except him that descended from heaven'; from which they concluded that Christ descended σωματικῶς from above. And they seem to have confirmed this belief, in Syria, by the use of the primitive translation of the Gospel of John into Syriac, in which we are told (John i. 14) that 'the Word became (or was) a body and dwelt among us.' To these Ephrem replies<sup>1</sup>

'You are not to say that the body of Christ descended from heaven...but it was Gabriel who descended from heaven...and therefore it says 'He that descended from heaven.''

And I think we can see the difficulty which arose in the interpretation of the first chapter of John by the naïve admission of another Syriac commentator<sup>2</sup>, to whom we shall presently refer, and who is perhaps retailing an actual remark of Ephrem, that the original reading was 'body' but it was changed to 'flesh' in order that people might not suppose that the body descended from heaven<sup>3</sup>.

One other instance shall be given of the importance of the Ephrem Commentary for a knowledge of the early heresies. I have pointed out elsewhere<sup>1</sup> the meaning of the curious passage<sup>2</sup> in which Ephrem says that the words in Daniel where 'a stone is cut out without hands,' are not the same in meaning as the passage 'Look to the mountain and the valley,' in which case he intimates the male and the female. But here he says 'without hands.'

The explanation of our Lord's birth from a virgin by means of Daniel's stone without hands is, of course, well known, but Ephrem reveals to us the counter text of the Adoptionist who objects to the stone without hands a stone hewn out of a mountain and a valley; he is quoting Isaiah li. 1 as a reference to the Syriac text with Ephrem's comment on it will shew, and hence concludes for a natural birth by the male and the female<sup>3</sup>.

It is in this way that we are able to restore the watchwords of early battlefields, and no book will help us to so many of these as Ephrem's Commentary on the Diatessaron. For the study of Marcionism, Gnosticism or Adoptionism, it is of very great value; and deserves, therefore, an edited text and a scientific commentary.

Not less important is the volume for the light that it throws upon the Old Syriac text both of the distinct Gospels and of the Diatessaron. The textual critic will read his Ephrem side by side with the oldest copies of the Syriac text. For if the Ephrem Commentary often throws light upon the early condition of the Syriac text, conversely the early Syriac texts (notably the Lewis text) often throw light upon Ephrem. The recurrence, for example, of some curious word or expression will often shew what was the reading most familiar to Ephrem, even where the verse itself may not be actually quoted, or where, when it was actually quoted, the influence of the later Vulgate text has caused a superficial correction.

For example, in Matt. i. 25, Ephrem's copy of the Diatessaron read 'Sancte habitabat cum ea' as in the Curetonian. Six times Ephrem quotes it directly; but the diffusion of the reading is such that not only does it influence his comments in other places such as (p. 21) the passage where he says that Joseph was so gentle as not to expel her from the house, sed cum ea habitaret; but it even turns up in the objection made by an ideal Adoptionist interlocutor who says (p. 26)

<sup>3</sup> Another Adoptionist error is corrected on p. 27, where we are told that the Scripture does not say 'a Saviour who is to become the Lord's Christ, but a Saviour who already is the Lord's Christ.'

Nonne ergo conjugium sanctum est, testante

This instance is the more curious, since the Cureton reading was probably intended as an Anti-Adoptionist correction. But the fact is that the reading must have acquired great prevalence, for we find traces of it in later Syriac commentators also.

Or take the passage to which we draw attention on p. 34 (Luke ii. 34), in which from the repeated word dubitare we are able to restore the text of Tatian in a place where a later reviser of Ephrem has substituted a reading more in accordance with the Greek.

A very interesting case will be found in the account of our Lord's healing of the leper<sup>2</sup>, where Ephrem comments as follows:

Dominus duo pro his duobus ei ostendit, reprehensionem, cum ei irasceretur, et misericordiam, cum sanaret. Quia dixit, Si vis, iratus est.....Propterea Dominus per indignationem monstravit se non ex personarum acceptione sanare.....
Quare Dominus propter has cogitationes ei iratus est et deinceps ei praecepit.....Sed et animadvertite non ei, sed leprae Christum iratum esse.

The continual play upon the words iratum esse shews that the text used by Ephrem had this expression. This is the more important because, as far as I know, up to the present time, the only evidence for such a reading was the Western text (with D, d, a ff<sup>2</sup>) in Mark i. 41, where Codex Bezae has ὀργισθεῖς. The diffusion of this reading in Syriac as well as in Greco-Latin texts is therefore demonstrated.

Or turn to the passage (Luke i. 6) where Zachary and Elisabeth are said<sup>3</sup> to be 'Immaculati in omni regione sua.' A reference to the foot-note of Mösinger shews that the text should have been printed 'Immaculati in omni habitatione sua'; and a few pages further on the same reading is betrayed where Ephrem says that it is not proper to criticise persons like Zachary and Elisabeth who are said to have been immaculate 'in omni vitae conditione,' for here again the editor notes that one of his copies reads 'in omni habitatione.' There can be little doubt as to the correct reading; but here the Sinai text comes to our aid, and solves the problem as to what had been puzzling the Armenian scribes, by telling us that Zachary and Elisabeth were 'without blame in all their conversation'; the word which we render 'conversation,' ḳiṣā, has been referred to its root which means to 'dwell' or 'inhabit.' We have thus an agreement between the Old Syriac text and that of Tatian in a very free and forcible translation.

But we need not say more on this point, except to add that what is true of Ephrem is also true of later Syriac commentators, especially of those who derive from him. Their comments as well as their texts are to be used in the determination of Old Syriac readings, and a trained ear will often catch the refrain of such readings and be able to separate them from the rest of the passage in which they may be imbedded.

It will, therefore, be admitted that the Ephrem commentary deserves critical editing, with a view to determine something more than the pre-existence, early diffusion and harmonisation of the four Gospels. And this is rendered the more necessary because the Editor of the Latin translation has not given us a scientific text; of the two copies, A and B, which he uses, one is an editorial recension made by a certain Nerses, in which difficulties have been conjecturally got rid of, and texts speculatively improved in such a way that we can only describe the work as in certain passages de-Ephremized. It would have been better to have printed the text merely from the copy A, without any reference to the other copy, than to combine the two, often so as to produce a text of which we can only say that, whatever it is, it is not the text of Ephrem. The first step then in studying the work is to purify it of some of the editorial B-readings and of all the composite A + B readings. I am sorry that my ignorance of Armenian does not permit me to undertake this correction<sup>1</sup>. But, if I cannot do this, I am glad

<sup>1</sup> It will also be necessary to correct a great many of the editor's references to the Old Testament which are demonstrated to be incorrect, as soon as we refer to the Syriac Bible, as well as to correct such lacunae of reference as in the passage to say that my researches in another direction have been very fruitful. I have set to work to see how much of the original Syriac text may be extant in the shape of Catenae or Commentaries on the Gospel in the Syriac tongue: and the present volume will shew that a great deal is to be gathered from the Syriac commentators both for the knowledge of the Diatessaron and of Ephrem's comment upon it.

Of the writers upon whom I depend those to whom I chiefly refer are Isho'dad of Merv who flourished about A.D. 850, Moses Bar-Kepha his contemporary, Bar-Ṣalibi and Bar-Hebraeus, who belong respectively to the 12th and 13th centuries. And to them must be added Ephrem himself, as a source for the original Syriac of the commentary. For it will be found that he has often incorporated portions of his own hymns, which appear in the Armenian text in the disguise of unsuspected prose<sup>1</sup>.

Of the other writers quoted, Isho'dad is a Nestorian, Bar-Kepha and the two later doctors are Monophysites, so that we may say that the whole Syrian church has laid its hands on Ephrem's commentary. The only thing we may have to be careful about will be the handling of cases where Ephrem's language might seem to favour unduly one or other of the great parties in the Syrian church. In such passages the text as transcribed by a learned doctor might easily become suspect.

Of these writers, unfortunately, none is at present in print, except in part Bar-Hebraeus; his commentary on Matthew in the work called the Storehouse of Mysteries was edited by Spanuth in 1879; and that on the Gospel of John in 1878 by Schwartz.

noted above from Is. li. 1, where Mösinger says, 'quo loco, nescio. The following are some of the corrections to be made.

p. 210, note 4, for Cf. Is. liii. 11 read Is. lii. 15.

p. 228 and p. 280, where the words 'Tu dixisti, Mundus per gratiam aedificabitur' are either quoted or implied, make the reference to Ps. lxxxiii. 3, which in English appears as 'I said, Mercy shall be built up for ever.'

I do not wish to criticize Mösinger severely: some of these passages were difficult to identify. Even if his edition is inadequate, he is a great public benefactor to whom we are all deeply indebted.

For Bar-Ṣalibi we must also turn to the MSS.: for I do not know that any portion of the commentary on the Gospels is in print, over and above the extracts given by Assemani. A large part of the text was however given in English and Latin translations by Dudley Loftus in the two valuable little books which he published at Dublin in 1672 and 1695<sup>1</sup>; and his MS. translations of the remainder into Latin are preserved in the Bodleian Library<sup>2</sup>.

For Moses Bar-Kepha I have consulted a fragmentary MS. containing his commentary on Matthew in the British Museum (Cod. Add. 17,274). Wright's description of the MS. I relegate to a note<sup>3</sup>. The importance of Moses Bar-Kepha in this connection lies in the fact that he knows the Ephrem commentary, which he sometimes expressly refers to, and that he imitates it; and further his commentary is one of the principal sources of Bar-Ṣalibi, who expressly names him in his preface as one of the authors whom he has laid under contribution. Anything, therefore, in which the two writers agree, must be read as from the pen of Moses Bar-Kepha, and not from Bar-Ṣalibi. Probably it will be found that Moses, in his turn, derives many of his comments from earlier sources.

<sup>3</sup> Wright, Cat. Syr. MSS., II. 620. A volume measuring about 14½ in. by 8¾, made up of portions of several paper MSS. It consists of 260 leaves, a great many of which are more or less torn. The quires are signed with letters. Each page is divided into two columns. Though written by several hands, the character throughout is a good regular cursive of the xith or xiith cent. The contents are as follows:

(1) Portions of a Commentary upon the Book of Genesis by Moses bar Kiphā...

(2) Portions of a Commentary on the Gospels, with a long introduction, by

Moses bar Kiphā:

(a) Introduction. Fol. 26 a.

(b) Commentary on St Matthew. Fol. 50 a (should be 48 a).

(c) A single fragment of the Commentary on St Luke. Fol. 152 a.

(3) Portions of a Commentary on the Gospel of St Matthew, by some other author. Fol. 121 a.

(4) Portions of a Commentary on the Pauline Epistles by Moses bar Kiphā:

(a) On the Epistle to the Romans. Fol. 153 a.

(b) On the First Epistle to the Corinthians. Title, fol. 190 b.

(c) On the Second Epistle to the Corinthians. Fol. 239 a.

(d) A single fragment of the Commentary on the Epistle to the Galatians.

The proof of Bar-Kepha's acquaintance with the Ephrem commentary is, as we have said, (i) direct, for in discussing the question whether Judas partook of the Eucharist or not, he gives Ephrem's opinion as to the washing off the sanctification of the bread by dipping it in water; and says it is from his Exposition of the Gospel; (ii) there is an indirect proof of his dependence in his imitation of the opening sentences of Ephrem, as will be seen by a reference to our collection of extracts at p. 24. Bar-Kepha also, in his introductory chapters, appears to be the source of Bar-Ṣalibi, and the references to the Diatessaron are, therefore, important for himself and for later writers. It will be found that he carefully distinguishes Tatian's Diatessaron from that of Ammonius.

Amongst the works to which Bar-Kepha refers, there is one which seems to be older than Ephrem, and to have been used by him, and which may perhaps be of great antiquity. The reader of Ephrem will have observed that there is often a strain of interpretation which consists in a very simple allegorisation of the Gospel and its contained parables. Such glosses as (Mös. p. 166) occur in the interpretation of the Planting of the Vineyard,

Colonus = lex,

Tres anni = tempus quo eis ostendit, se esse Salvatorem, and those which we have quoted from p. 192, seem to belong to a simpler and more archaic hand than that of Ephrem, and they occur in all the commentators.

Bar-Kepha says expressly in one place that these very elementary comments come from a book which he calls or the Succinct Exposition of Matthew.

ܕܡܫܘܢܐ ܕܡܬܘܟܐ ܕܡܬܘܟܐ

It is, as we have said, quite possible that we have here the traces of some very early document. At all events nothing could be more simple or childlike than the commentary which Bar-Kepha quotes, and to which other commentators evidently allude.

Of Isho'dad nothing has been published beyond a few references by my American friends Dr Hall and Prof. Gottheil; the copy from which I have worked is Cod. Add. 1973 in the Cambridge University Library: and it is from this source that most of my identifications have been made. It is a late paper MS. in the Nestorian character, consisting of 323 leaves; originally there were more, but a number of leaves have disappeared at the beginning of the book, which is a commentary on the Pentateuch, and I think a single leaf has gone at the end. Possibly there may be one or two lacunae. The Gospels begin as follows: Matthew on f. 13 r. (the previous leaves being occupied by the remains of the Commentary on the Pentateuch), Mark on f. 145 v., Luke on f. 169 v., and John on f. 237 r. (ending on f. 323 v.). As might be expected, the Commentary is largely of the nature of Catena, and the authors quoted are sometimes (but not often) indicated by a rubricated name and by a rubric punctuation. The interest of the Commentary lies chiefly in the wealth of unknown or imperfectly known authors whom it quotes: of these the principal are Ephrem and Theodore of Mopsuestia (the latter under the name of 'the Interpreter'); but beyond these, and some of the conventional Greek fathers who were early translated into Syriac, we shall find, Nestorius, Ḥannana (of Ḥedhaiyabh), Babai the Great, Babai the Persian, Ḥonain, and other valuable writers, as well as references to lost books, such as the Diatessaron and the Succinct Exposition of Matthew, which are quoted by title: occasionally he refers to a book of traditions by Hebrew Christians which supplement the Gospel narrative<sup>1</sup>. So valuable is the work that it deserves to be published in full, for it contains almost all that is important in later writers like Bar-Ṣalibi and Bar-Hebraeus, and in an earlier form. I hope to be able to commit it to the press before long, but as my first interest in the work centres in the extracts from Ephrem and from the Diatessaron, I have collected these as far as they have come under my notice in reading, and the result lies in the following pages, supplemented by such parallels and augmentations as I have been able to draw from the great Monophysite Doctors. It is needless to say that no attempt is made at completeness. Not only must there be many passages of the Ephrem commentary extant in Syriac which we have failed to recognize, but it is reasonable to suppose that the Armenian Commentary by the aid of which we make our identifications has often suffered from contraction, in either the process of translation or the course of tradition, so that portions of Ephrem may be found in Isho'dad and elsewhere (either expressly named or recognized by their pronounced Ephremitic flavour) which we are unable to place in their proper connexion in the Commentary, or which we can only place there with much hesitation. For passages of this kind a good margin must be left.

Enough has probably been said to shew the importance of the new Commentary. Attention had already been drawn to it by two American scholars, first by Dr Isaac H. Hall, who has the credit of opening the mine, and then by Prof. Gottheil, who had used some of the direct references to the Diatessaron, which are contained in it.

Dr Hall's article will be found in the Journal of Biblical Literature, Vol. XI., 1891, Pt 11, pp. 153—155<sup>1</sup>, and Prof. Gottheil's in the same periodical, Vol. XII., 1892, Pt 1, pp. 68—71. It is to these notices that I am indebted for my knowledge of Isho'dad and his Commentary, and for the suggestions of its bearing upon the Diatessaron and associated questions. That it is really the work of Isho'dad may be seen:

(i) from the statement of the Nestorian bibliographer 'Ebed-yeshu or 'Abd-isho' (+1318), who tells us that Isho'dad composed inter alia an exposition of the New Testament;

(ii) from the headings and subscriptions of the MS., which tell us clearly that this is the book spoken of by 'Abd-isho'. Thus the Cambridge copy on f. 13 r. says:

'By the help of the Lord Jesus Christ we begin to write the Light of the New Testament, which the lover of learning Mar Isho'dad of Merv<sup>2</sup>, bishop of Hedatha<sup>3</sup> in Assyria, toiled over and collected from the writings of the interpreters and teachers of the holy Church. Our Lord, help me, and save me, and make me wise by the grace of thy mercy. Amen.'

On the last leaf we read as follows:

'Here is ended by the help of him who created this world [cod. adds 'the maker'] this book of the Light of the Gospel which is full of light which was made by the holy governor Mar Isho'dad the blessed, bishop of the district of Assyria....'

It will be noticed that there is some confusion in the titles and subscriptions. Isho'dad is called deMaruzaya, where we should have expected Maruzaya or merely deMaru<sup>1</sup>. Further the closing subscription calls him Bishop of the region of Assyria, without naming the city.

But, however this may be, the name of the author is clearly given, and there is no doubt that it is the Nestorian writer of whom 'Abd-isho' speaks, and whom Wright, in his Syriac Literature (p. 220), described as follows:

'Isho'dadh of Marū or Merv, bishop of Hēdhattā or al-Hadithah, was a competitor with Theodosius for the patriarchate in 852. According to 'Abhd-isho' his principal work was a Commentary on the New Testament, of which there are MSS. in Berlin, Sachau 311, and in the collection of the S.P.C.K.<sup>2</sup> It extended however to the Old Testament as well, for in Cod. Vat. ccclvii. we find the portions relating to Genesis and Exodus.'

The S.P.C.K. MS. to which Wright alludes is the one which we use from the Cambridge University Library: it contains, as we said above, part of the Commentary on the Pentateuch<sup>3</sup>. There is also a copy (= Bodl. Or. 624) in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

We shall now give some of the references to the Diatessaron which are found in Isho'dad, after which we shall pass on to collect the fragments which Isho'dad has extracted from Ephrem's Commentary upon the Diatessaron, in connexion with which we shall have to ask whether the acquaintance of the writer with Ephrem extends beyond the commentary in question.

It is very important to observe that the allusions both to the Diatessaron and to the Ephrem Commentary are so extensive that it is necessary to allow that the quotations involve an actual acquaintance with the works in question, and consequently there is no room for doubting Isho'dad's further statement that the Ephrem Commentary is a commentary upon the text of Tatian. It may seem unnecessary to make this last remark, but it is important to remember that the identification has been questioned in certain quarters, and every piece of evidence upon the point is useful.

<sup>1</sup> Is there any chance of this being the same person as Isho' Maruzaya or Isho' of Merv, the compiler of a Syriac lexicon, which was one of the sources of Bar 'Ali's glosses? see Wright, Syriac Literature, p. 215.

<sup>3</sup> Three other MSS. are said to exist in America, viz. two in the Library of Lane Theological Seminary, one (incomplete) in the possession of Dr Hall.

But when we say that Ephrem commented upon the text of the Diatessaron, we do not mean to imply that the text of the Diatessaron had come down unchanged to Ephrem's day. It had two hundred years of life before it reached Ephrem's hands, and, loyal as Syria was to her great teacher and evangelist, we have no right to suppose that the Diatessaron enjoyed an immunity from correction of which the Gospels in their separate form shew no signs. If they were corrected again and again, the Diatessaron was not likely to escape from similar treatment. It need not have been reformed to the Peshito in Ephrem's time, and the evidence is clear that it was not; but the evidence is also clear that in passages which were of dogmatic importance, as well as in some of a less pronounced character, the hand of the corrector was laid upon the text. The same thing happened after Ephrem had done his work, for, as we have seen, the Commentary will often shew earlier readings than the text. More than that, an adventurous writer has occasionally aired his own erudition on Ephrem's pages by telling us what the Greek text is, and sometimes has displaced the original Syriac by his obtrusive activity<sup>1</sup>.

Let us then examine into the direct traces of the Diatessaron in Isho'dad.

1. In the prologue to Mark (f. 146 r.) we are told ܟܥܥܘܠܐ ܘܥܘܠܘܬܐ ܕܡܫܘܠܗ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ

 ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ
 ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ
 ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ
 ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ ܕܡܫܘܠܝ

i.e. Titianos the disciple of Justin the philosopher and martyr selected from the four gospels and combined and composed a Gospel and called it Diatessaron, i.e. of the Combined; and on the Divinity of Christ he did not write; and upon this Gospel Mar Ephrem commented.

[The extract is given by Gottheil, l. c. p. 70.]

This statement reappears with slight changes, some amplification, and not a little ultimate confusion, in Bar-Şalibi and in Bar-Hebraeus. Bar-Şalibi does not have the sentence 'and on the <sup>1</sup> It will be seen that I am now satisfied that the references to the 'Graecus' in the Commentary are not from Ephrem, but some later person.

Divinity of Christ he did not write,' nor does Bar-Hebraeus. Both of them add that the combined Gospel begins with the words 'In the beginning was the Word.' Both of them change ܘܫܘܕܐܕ of Isho'dad into ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ, which suggests the dependence of Bar-Hebraeus on Bar-Ṣalibi. The word ܘܫܘܒܐ is justified by the following ܘܫܘܒܐ. Finally, Bar-Hebraeus combines with the whole passage (if indeed he is the first to do so) the language of Eusebius with regard to the Diatessaron of Ammonius<sup>1</sup>.

2. In discussing the opening verses of S. Mark's Gospel, Isho'dad distinguishes the reading of the Diatessaron of Tatian from that of Ammonius<sup>2</sup>.

f. 149 r.

ܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ
ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ

i.e. Others say: that the book of the Diatessaron which was composed<sup>3</sup> in Alexandria says instead of the passage of the Diatessaron 'it is written in Isaiah,' [it is written] in the prophets.'

Here the distinction is clearly drawn between the two Diatessarons and it is affirmed that Tatian read ἐν Ἡσαΐᾳ and Ammonius ἐν τοῖς προφήταις. It may be questioned, Does not this involve the admission that Tatian began his Gospel with Mark? The answer, however, must be in the negative. What the commentator has referred to in Tatian is not Mark, but Matthew (iii. 3), as may be seen by comparing the words ascribed to Tatian with the Old Syriac translation of ὁ ῥηθεὶς διὰ Ἡσαΐου in Matt. iii. 3.

ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ

ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ ܘܫܘܕܐܕܘܫܘܒܐ

<sup>1</sup> Note that the same statements are made again in Bar-Ṣalibi's preface to the four Gospels, which Loftus does into Latin as follows:

c. 33. Nonnulli dicunt quod Eusebius Caesariensis quando observasset Eumonium Alexandrinum confecisse Evangelium διατέσσαρον (sic!) vocatum (hoc est) e quatuor, et adhaerentiam verborum mutasse, similiter etiam fecisse Titianum Graecum haereticum, ipse coegit (l. collegit) illa quatuor et eorum singula seorsim scripsit.

The reference, therefore, to Mark in Tatian is a misunderstanding. As to the reference to Ammonius, this is probably correct, for there is reason to believe that in Ammonius the Gospels are kept distinct.

As we have said, Isho'dad carefully distinguishes the two Diatessarons; it is otherwise with his followers, to whom the confusion was natural enough: and in one place of Bar-Ṣalibi which deals with this very passage before us the confusion is obvious, though it may be questioned whether it may not be due to faulty transcription, since Bar-Ṣalibi elsewhere makes the distinction clearly enough. At all events, here is the passage, with the accompanying translation of Loftus.

ܐܘܬܪܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ

'Others [say] that in the book of Diatessaron which is preserved<sup>1</sup> in Alexandria and was written by Tatianus the Bishop, as also in the Greek Gospel and in the Harkalian, it is written "In the prophet," without explaining what prophet.'

The exact genesis of the confusion is not easily determined; the passage evidently leans on early statements as to the composition of the Diatessaron of Ammonius; and it is quite possible that it is merely a blundering restatement of the passage given above from Isho'dad, with the name of the author of the better-known Diatessaron brought in from a marginal gloss.

3. (f. 29 r.) On Matt. i. 20 Isho'dad remarks, inter alia,

ܐܘܬܪܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ
 ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ

'Others say: that the one who translated from Hebrew into Syriac changed the word, and instead of the expression "that which is begotten in her," used the words "that which is born in her;" but the Diatessaron says "that which is born in her, is from the Holy Ghost." [The extract is given by Gottheil, l. c. p. 69.]

4. On Matt. iii. 5, according to Isho'dad<sup>1</sup>,

ܘܢܫܘܬܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܘܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܘܢܫܘܬܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ

i.e. The Diatessaron says, His meat was honey and milk of the mountains.

We correct the text to 'milk and honey of the mountains,' and remark that 'of the mountains' is the translation of ἀγριος: [cf. Cod. Ludov. in loc., and the Palestine Syriac version passim].

As this passage influences both Bar-Ṣalibi and Bar-Hebraeus, I give the remainder of Dr Hall's extract for the sake of comparison.

'But the Diatessaron says, His food indeed was honey and milk of the mountains. Others, the locusts indeed are tender roots that resemble parsnep, i.e. gezar, and not very pleasant to the taste: which some call qamsis but others qamsin, but in Persian mang. Others say that they are roots which are called qauche, which in form indeed is like locusts, but in taste sweet, like honey. Others that they are shoots of plants, and also that this is what is meant by the honey. This is not sweet they say, but that is bitter and loathsome which wild bees make<sup>2</sup>.

According to the Expositor, locusts are winged creatures, and the honey is that of nature; that is from the warmth of place [i.e. its habitat is warm] and its constitution air, since it is continually found there [lit. they continually find it there].'

The corresponding passage in Bar-Ṣalibi is as follows:

ܘܢܫܘܬܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܘܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܘܢܫܘܬܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܘܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ
ܘܢܫܘܬܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ ܘܗܘܐ ܕܗܘܐ ܕܡܠܟܐ

i.e. Others say: that in the Diatessaron, i.e. the Gospel of Four, it is written that his meat was milk and honey of the wild<sup>3</sup>; since milk was proper to his youth and honey to the manly age<sup>4</sup>.

be said, may not Ephrem have known the tradition from other sources than Tatian?

But Zahn is justified by the extract from Isho'dad (f. 43 v.) which we have printed on p. 43, in which it is expressly stated, according to the Diatessaron, that 'light shined forth at the Jordan.'

6. The next passage tells us of a curious primitive rendering of the word συκομορέα in the Diatessaron, which, as we shall see, was not in Ephrem's copy.

f. 100 v.

ܕܝܫܘܥ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ

ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ
ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ

i.e. Others say: that Bethphage means the place of insipid figs: and they bring forward testimony from the Diatessaron and the Greek version; in the story that little Zachaeus, who was little of stature and little of soul, climbed up into the Phagē that he might see Jesus; and this is in Syriac called the insipid fig-tree. [Cf. Bar-Bahlul who says that this Phagē is the reading of the Combined Gospel.]

Here then we have the translation of 'sycamore' by Tatian; and now turn to Ephrem in loc. (Mösinger, p. 180) and we shall find him calling it a 'surda ficulnea,' and making comments upon Zacchaeus, who was not to remain 'in surditate.' Is this an interpretation of ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ, or is it not an intermediate stage in which the text has been corrected to ܕܡܫܚܐ ܕܡܫܚܐ?

If this is not the explanation, what are we to say of Ephrem's surdus?

It appears, then, that we have recovered a number of passages in which the reading of the Diatessaron is expressly given by Isho'dad.

But there is also more light to be obtained from the later commentators who, though they appear to depend upon Isho'dad in the information which they furnish, do not wholly depend upon him. For example, there is a very important passage in which Bar-Ṣalibi seems to intimate that Tatian gave no harmonized account of the Resurrection. Every reader of Ephrem's text as current in the Armenian will have been struck by the poverty of the Commentary at this part of the Gospel; and no doubt suspicions will have arisen that there was something 'uncanny' in the text of Tatian where the Resurrection is recorded.

Now Bar-Şalibi expressly says<sup>1</sup>, in the prologue to the Gospels, c. 33:

Կա՛մալ յաւստ ում Մատիւս Կլիմաս Յաւատար ծիւղն տօնիչն ի իր իր Կարգն . Աւելցարն .

 Եւ յաւստ . Եւ յաւստ Կարգն Կարգն ի իր
 . . . Բիւլցարն . Եւ յաւստ

a passage which Loftus does into Latin as follows:

'Eusebius Caesariensis sollicitus fuit ut constitueret Canones Evangelii quod constat ex Epistola ejus ad Carpianum, et in iis monstret harmoniam Evangelistarum. Scripserant enim Eumonius et Titianus etiam Evangelium vocatum διαρέσασπον [sic] (i.e.) quatuor prout supra diximus, et quando venerant ad historiam resurrectionis et observaverant variationem abstinuerunt ab ipsa opera, sed Eusebio curae erat, ut hujusmodi Canones conficeret, et ostenderet Evangelistarum inter se convenientiam...'

Here we are expressly told that Tatian and Ammonius found it impossible to harmonize the Gospels of the Resurrection and gave up the attempt. Whatever may be the meaning of this, it is an important passage, and needs to be carefully weighed by those who like myself have been arguing freely from the contents and arrangement of the Arabic Harmony in its closing chapters.

Moses Bar-Kepha, as we have said, appears to be connected with the source of some of the disputable matter in Bar-Şalibi and Bar-Hebraeus. For this reason I transcribe the sentences in which Moses speaks of Eusebius and his Canons. In his introductory chapters we have as follows:

i.e. And if he had said body, it would have been supposed that he had sent down a body from heaven: for this reason it was changed to 'flesh.'

I suspect that something has dropped here from the text of Ephrem, which is represented in the accompanying extract of Isho'dad: as I have suggested on p. 4 it was one of Ephrem's doctrinal points that one should not say that the body of Christ descended from heaven. The trouble occurs again in Isho'dad in connexion with the Old Syriac reading in John vi. 51 'I am the living bread that descended,' 'the bread that I will give is my body' (so Cod. Ludov., Cod. Curet., and the Palestine text).

Accordingly Isho'dad says<sup>1</sup>, He did not wish to teach us that his body was from heaven. It was not the body that descended from heaven, but the power that made the bread a body from heaven, for our Lord was teaching here, not of his own body, but of the bread of the mystery.

The Armenian text seems here to have abbreviated both the text and comment of Ephrem; for the parallel passage in Isho'dad tells us that the annunciation to Zacharias was made in the sixth month, reckoned from the tenth of the former Teshri. And we find by reference to Mösinger, p. 18 (v. infra), that this is the actual date assigned by Ephrem to the visit of the angel to Zacharias.

i.e. The annunciation was made to Zacharias in the tenth day of the former Teshrin; and to Mary on the tenth day of Nisan.

The translator has given us Hori as the equivalent of the former Teshrin, and Sahmi for the latter Teshrin; Arek stands for Nisan. The latter identification explains the allusion to the flower of Arek on p. 17: by which term either John the Baptist or Christ (it is not quite clear which) is described.

The allusion to the flowery Nisan is exactly in Ephrem's manner; for example Hymnus de Crucifixione (Lamy, i. 708):

לעם חם חסא
 חליל לך לך לך

i.e. Let Nisan adorn him with a crown of its flowers; or Hymnus de Resurrectione (Lamy, ii. 762):

לעם חם חסא
 חסא חסא חסא

i.e. In Nisan the flowers break open their cups, and their roses blow; and so passim. Cf. ed. Rom. iii. 603, 604 etc.

But, in fact, as will be seen later on, a large piece of this very hymn, beginning with the two lines which we have quoted, is transferred bodily into the Commentary: see under Mösinger, p. 237.

The hymn last quoted explains also why Ephrem says (p. 18) that in the month of Nisan the nakedness of Adam was covered: "eodem die agnus verus in utero virginis inclusus est, quo tempore lux potitur imperio, et per hoc docuit, se venisse, ut Adami nuditatem obtegeret." We may compare (Lamy, ii. p. 763):

אַדָּם לִישָׁם כְּשִׁיבָא.
 כְּחַיִּי לְאִרֵּי כְּבִישְׁמָא.
 לְתִילָא עֲלִישָׁא מַלְבָּא.

 And mingles its sweetness with the air;
 It clothes the bare trees,
 Which is a mystery of the Father of Orphans;
 It shames the nakedness of the earth,

 The nakedness of Eve in Eden—or p. 769:

In connexion with the account of the visit of the shepherds to Bethlehem, there is room for a suspicion that the commentary contained originally some statement as to the gifts brought by the shepherds. For we find that Isho'dad refers expressly to Mar Ephrem as the source of a statement which he makes with regard to the gifts of the shepherds. The passage is as follows:

Isho'dad (f. 182 v.).

ܘܢܘܨܐ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܐ ܕܝܫܘܥ ܘܡܘܨܐ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܐ ܕܝܫܘܥ

i.e. Mar Ephrem says that the shepherds came with three kinds of gifts: flesh and milk and glory; flesh for Joseph, milk for His mother, and glory for the child; and he says, moreover, that the coming of the Magi was ordered for the self-same day by the wonder-working Divine intimation.

There is something very like this in Ephrem's fifth Sermon in natalem Domini (ed. Rom. ii. 418) as follows:

ܠܦܫܘܬܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ ܕܚܝܘܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ
 ܕܚܝܘܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ ܕܚܝܘܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ
 ܕܚܝܘܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ ܕܚܝܘܢܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ ܕܡܪܝܢܐ

The question is, whether this is a mere piece of poetic fancy on Ephrem's part; if so, this must be the passage referred to by Isho'dad; if, on the other hand, Ephrem is working upon some expansion of the gospel narrative, we should expect him also to shew signs of the same in the Commentary on the Diatessaron.

Mar Ephrem: Through thy own soul the spear shall pass, in order that many minds may doubt from the hearts, those namely who doubted: i.e. thou also shalt doubt, because she marvelled at the marvels and related them to others, and they were set free from doubts concerning him.

The reference to the Graecus is by a later hand, for it has displaced the true text in which there must have stood the key-word dubitare. And as a matter of fact the desired word is easily restored in the quotation of Isho'dad by the substitution of ~~ܕܚܝܘܢܐ~~ for ~~ܕܥܝܢܐ~~.

Mary the Virgin is identified with Mary Magdalene, both here and elsewhere in the commentary; the same confusion is found in the Talmud, which calls the mother of our Lord by the name of Miriam the woman's hairdresser, which latter term is an attempt to translate the word Magdalene. (See also Bar-Salibi, who tells us that Mary Magdalene was so called because her hair was plaited.)

The passage in Luke, with the restored word supplied as above, is the key to the understanding of the passage, Möisinger 269, where indeed the verse itself is quoted.

Maria dubitavit quando audierat eum surrexisse, et venit et vidit eum et dixit: Si tu sustulisti eum, ideo hoc dixit, ut ei ostenderet, se vere resurrexisse.....sed quia illi dubitaverunt, dixit ad eam: Donec ascendo ad Patrem meum, non accedes ad me, ut illud: Tuam ipsius animam pertransibit gladius i.e. denegatio.

Möisinger, p. 31. Ephrem tells us that the Mystery of the Virgin Birth was revealed to Moses, Gideon and Ezekiel. The explanation of this lies in the Burning Bush, the Dew on the Fleece, and the Closed Door of the Sanctuary. Statements to that effect will be found in Ephrem (ed. Rom. iii. 695 for Moses: i. 317 for Gideon; and ed. Lamy, ii. 532 for Ezekiel).

I have no space to discuss at length the parallels between the Commentary and the works of Ephrem: but this passage seemed to require a word of explanation.

Moreover, gold denotes that worship, which is preferred be-

Gold as to a king, and myrrh as to Him who is about to die for the world, and frankincense as to God.

Bar-Şalibi (or is it Loftus ?) has not understood the meaning of the worship which was made to gold (probably, as Mösinger suggests, to the golden calf), and has explained it to mean that worship is preferred before gold (שלגדא קאמא קאמא). Otherwise he follows Ephrem closely. The mystical interpretations of the gold, myrrh and frankincense (in this order in Western texts) go back to a very early time, and are given by many of the early fathers. Especially note Irenaeus (ed. Mass. 184).

“Myrrham quidem, quod ipse erat, qui pro mortali humano genere moretur et sepeliretur : Aurum vero, quoniam Rex, cujus Regni finis non est : Thus vero, quoniam Deus, etc.”

In connexion with the account of the coming of the Magi, note that, according to the Syrian commentators, it was the opinion of Mar Ephrem that the Magi came to Bethlehem two years after the birth of Christ. And the question arises as to whether they deduced this opinion from the Commentary on the Gospel or from other parts of Mar Ephrem’s writings. That such was the opinion of Ephrem is certain from such statements as the following from his Hymn on the Nativity (ed. Lamy, ii. p. 495):

קאמא קאמא קאמא
 קאמא קאמא קאמא קאמא קאמא קאמא

and Mar Jacob say that after two years, when they brought him up to Jerusalem and when they were at Bethlehem, the Magi came.

The question then is whether Ephrem says definitely in his Commentary what is attributed to him by the later writers and what is certainly found elsewhere in his works. And in answer to this question we may say that not only is it involved in Ephrem's interpretation that the visit of the Magi was at a later period than that of the shepherds, but we also find that at a subsequent place in the Commentary he reverts to the destruction of the children by Herod and says that Christ was two years old at the time. The reference will be found at p. 40 of Mösinger in the words: 'Sed cum duorum esset annorum hoc ei facere (sc. occidere) cogitarant cum suo principe Herode.'

The dependence of the later commentators on Ephrem is involved in their statements as well as in the express ascription by Bar-Hebraeus.

To the foregoing may be added the marginal note quoted by Zahn (Tatian, p. 46) from Cod. Vat. Syr. 268, as described by Adler in N. T. Verss. Syr. p. 81:

i.e. Others say: that he laid his hand tremblingly on the head of his Lord.

It is not easy to determine whether this is Tatian or Ephrem; but I incline to think that it is the former. As will be seen, the story was known to Isho'dad, and it will also be found in Bar-Şalibi, though Bar-Şalibi does not know from whence it is taken. 'From whence, says he, is it known that John put his hand on the head of Christ, when no such thing is written in the Gospel?' And we say that it is from the Old Testament, from the passage where the Lord said to Moses, 'I will cover thee with my hand,' and from this, that 'Moses put his hands upon Aaron and anointed him and consecrated him.'

The laying on of hands is implied also in the statement made a little lower down that 'per Joannem enim propheticam et sacerdotalem dignitatem accepit.'

The Maronite breviary (ed. 1665) shews an acquaintance with the statement that John laid his hand on the head of Christ, as well as with the previously quoted description of John as the one who betrothed the Church to Christ. In the festival of the Decollation of the Baptist we are told

ܟܘܘܢܐ ܟܘܠܟ ܝܘܒ ܟܘܠܟ ܘܢܐ ܡܠ ܝܘܒܐ ܘܢܐܘܢܐ ܡܘܢܝ ܠܐ ܡܘܠܘܦ ܡܘܢܐ ܘܕܘܪܘܕܝܟܐ

i.e. And he betrothed to the Son of God the Holy Church, to Him who was willing and humbled Himself: and he put his right hand on His head at His baptism; the Lord of the World bowed His head beneath the hand of John.

(The sentences are probably due to Ephrem.)

i.e. And straightway, as the Diatessaron testifies, light shone forth, and over the Jordan was spread a vail of white clouds, and there appeared many hosts of spiritual beings who were praising God in the air; and quietly Jordan stood still from its flowing, its waters being at rest; and a sweet odour was wafted from thence.

From the reference to the light which shone at the Jordan, it was at least a probable hypothesis that the text of Tatian had some traces of the peculiar amplifications of the account of the Baptism which are current in early copies, versions and fathers. This hypothesis is now rendered reasonably certain by the direct testimony of Isho'dad. It is not necessary to suppose that the whole of the extract which we have given from Isho'dad is from Tatian. Probably the quotation is contained in the first clause, or, at most, in the words :

Mar Ephrem, shewing that the type possesses great likeness to the reality, says: Eliezer, indeed, who betrothed Rebecca, shewed to her Isaac when he came to meet them in the field ; and John who betrothed the Church, shewed to her the bridegroom her spouse who came to her at the river Jordan. Eliezer betrothed Rebecca at the well of water ; at the well of water Jacob betrothed Rachel : and at the well of water Moses betrothed Zippora ; and at the river of water John betrothed the Church.

Bar-Şalibi abbreviates the passage as follows : i.e. (Loftus, p. 88) By water were made the Espousals of Rebecca, of Rachel and Tsiphora, typifying the Water of Baptism by which the Church is espoused.

It is interesting to notice that Isho'dad, while confessedly transcribing from Ephrem, corrects Ephrem's mistake in making Eliezer stand by the well and point out Isaac to Rebecca.

Mösinger, p. 41.

Ecce, hic est agnus Dei, hic est, qui venit, tollere peccata mundi.

The Commentary belonging to this passage has disappeared, except for the words inserted 'hic est qui venit,' which are explained in Isho'dad : probably Isho'dad's comment is directly from Ephrem, having been lost in the Armenian text.

It may, of course, be held that the words 'hic est qui venit' are a part of the text of Tatian, and not of the commentary of Ephrem. On p. 43 we find again, Ecce venit agnus Dei et is est qui tollit peccata mundi.

Mösinger, p. 52.

Factae sunt nuptiae in Cana Galilaeorum. Et cum Dominus eo veniret, dicit ad eum mater : Vinum non habent hic. Dicit ei Jesus : Quid est mihi et tibi, mulier ? Non mihi tempus advenit : id est, ego non vi eis me ingero, sed ipsi animadvertant,

The night signifies the teaching of the prophets and the apostles, which is among the people the understanding of which is darkened ; but the teaching falls from on high into the world which is compared with the sea. The two ships are the circumcision and the uncircumcision. The right hand side from ship to ship (?). And that they beckoned to their companions signifies the 72 disciples ; for they were inadequate for the fishing and the harvest.

Note that the comparison between the sea and the world is a favourite one with Ephrem. The passage is given almost exactly in Isho'dad, and there is an added sentence to interpret the 'right side of the ship' which seems to have dropped out of the Armenian text, and is in its present form scarcely intelligible in the Syriac.

Matt. vi. 23. Si lumen, quod in te est, tenebrae sunt; i.e. si per eleemosynas, quae lucidae sunt, peccas, quanto magis per peccata quae obtenebrant. Adulterium et blasphemia ex una tantum parte spectari possunt, quia nihil aliud sunt, quam causae transgressionum, eleemosynae autem duplicem habent faciem, quippe quae, si humanae gloriae causa dantur, ad transgressionem perducunt, si autem manus datoris ad fratrem indigentem ex charitate se extendunt, etiam cogitationes ad Deum, qui retribuit, pertinent ut Scriptura dicit: Ubi thesauri vestri sunt, ibi erunt et corda vestra.

The passage is a difficult one, and Mösinger has corrected one of his mss. from the other, without intimating what the text was which he found to be unintelligible. The Syriac is fairly clear; two words seem to be repeated by accident, which we have bracketed, and it is possible that some connecting words may have dropped.

For adultery and blasphemy have only one side, that they are sinful; but alms has two sides. If it is given in human vainglory, it makes the man to sin: but if the hand of the giver is stretched out to the needy, his thought is extended towards God the recom-penser; this is what is meant by 'Where thy treasure is there also, etc.'

Little by little he revealed himself to the Samaritan woman; first by his thirst, and then as a Jew, and then as the Christ; from degree to degree he led her and set her on the highest degree. She saw him first as a thirsty man, then as a Jew, then as a prophet, and then as God. And also it is she who would have persuaded him as a thirsty man, who would have shrunk<sup>2</sup> as from a Jew, and she asked questions as from a doctor, and was reproved as by the prophet, and worshipped him as God.

Mösinger, p. 141.

Mar Ephrem. At the birthday feast of Herod, when the head of S. John was cut off unlawfully, Pilate sent Romans and killed those who had taken part in the banquet, for he found out that they were sacrificing, though forbidden to sacrifice by the Romans. And they were enraged with one another from that day; but they were reconciled on the day of the suffering of him who is the cause of the peace of all created things.

Those who came were sent for the purpose of tempting him, that they might know what he would say. And if he should say that they were righteously killed, he would be found to be an adversary of the law; but if he speak evilly of their murder, they would accuse him before Pilate as being adverse to the kingdom of the Romans.

Exposition of Matthew succinctly.

He calls God the man, and his people the vineyard; the hedge is the observance of laws, or the help of God; the tower is the temple, the wine-vat is the altar on which the blood of the sacrifices is shed; the husbandmen are the band of priests;
 the servants that were sent are the prophets; the sending of the son at the last he calls his own coming; and that they cast him out of the vineyard and killed him means that he perished at their hands.

John viii. 56. Abraham desideravit videre diem meum, vidit et gavisus est. Quem diem? Illum, de quo ei dictum est: 'In semine tuo benedicentur omnes gentes.' Vidit autem et gavisus est quia vidit mysterium agni.

The mystery of the lamb seen by Abraham is the 'ram caught in the thicket.' Cf. Mösinger, p. 207, Vidit Abraham diem meum et gavisus est, nimirum per agnum in arbore qui solvit et liberavit Isaac ligatum, ut et Dominus vincula gentium solvit per crucem.

i.e. a God-possessed man interprets it on this wise: the thief is the deceiver and the liar, like Theudas and Judas, &c.

The interpretation was shown by Zahn (Tatian, p. 47) to exist in the margin of copies of the Heracleian version at John x. 8 in the form 'Theudas, Judas the Galilean &c.' But here Ephrem does not seem to be named. Isho'dad does not name Ephrem, but speaks of the interpretation being due to a 'Theophorus,' a form of quotation which he sometimes employs.

The interpretation, however, is certainly popular with the author of the Commentary, for we find (i) that he returns to it on p. 209 'Et illis annis surrexit Theodas ejusque socii quos Christus latrones vocavit'; (ii) the verse commented on was a favourite Marcionite proof-text, and was sure to require special treatment in such an anti-Marcionite book as the Commentary undoubtedly is. Note that Isho'dad (f. 278 v.) is sensible of its bearing on the Marcionite controversy, for he says

לֹא הָיוּ לַחֲסִידֵי מֹשֶׁה וְלַחֲסִידֵי
 הַנְּבִיאִים הַלְּזָבִים וְלַחֲסִידֵי מַרְסִיּוֹן.

As to what some say, that Jesus dipped the bread and gave it to him, and washed off its sanctity and the blessing which he had invoked, there is no likelihood in it.

It appears that Ephrem is really concerned over the fact that Judas had partaken of the holy bread and presumably inherited eternal life thereby; so he invents a theory of the de-consecration of the elements, by dipping the bread in water. (Cf. Maher, Diatessaron.) Isho'dad very properly rejects the theory.

It appears, however, in Moses bar Kepha, with a special reference to the Commentary of Ephrem.

Moses bar Kepha (f. 115 b. 2).

In Nisan the flowers burst their cups
 (lit. bosoms)
 And their roses come forth ;
 They leave their cups in nakedness
 And become a crown for others :
 As is Nisan, so is its feast.
 On the feast the high priest rent his garments (lit. sinus)
 And the priesthood fled from him,
 And left him naked
 And was spread over our Saviour.

As was pointed out above (p. 8), we have here an actual piece of Ephrem’s poetry disguised as prose. The Armenian translator has misunderstood some points or abbreviated his text. He was perhaps puzzled with the expression ‘as is Nisan, so is its feast,’ and consequently ‘sic quoque mense Nisan’ has become attached to the next sentence.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

The foregoing collection of agreements between the Commentary ascribed to Ephrem and the works of later Syriac Commentators will be sufficient to finally dissipate any residual scepticism as to the substantial authorship of the famous Commentary and as to the text upon which it is based. No one who is the least versed in Quellen-Kritik would have any doubt as to the dependence of the later Syriac commentators upon the Ephrem Commentary, even if they had transcribed their extracts without the frequent introductory formula that 'Mar Ephrem says.' Nor would any one who was acquainted with the writings of the great Syrian father fail to recognise that the Commentary (even if it had come down to us anonymously) was so full of Ephrem's ideas, and of extracts from his hymns and discourses that it could have been identified as his independently of any superscription or tradition. The only direction in which doubt could enter would be in the possible case of a commentary made up, say, by an affectionate disciple, from Ephrem's works with some amalgamated matter from other sources and published under Ephrem's name.

There are some things in the Commentary which appear to invite the supposition, and when we remark that an actual disciple of Ephrem, named Mar Abbā, is credited with a commentary on the Gospel, we may very well ask whether there is any reason to suppose two commentaries on the Gospel to have been written in such close literary proximity. Is it possible that the Commentary of Mar Abbā is the same as the Ephrem Commentary?

The answer must, however, be in the negative. There are a number of extracts from the Commentary of Mar Abbā preserved in the British Museum MS. Add. 17,194, but, while they shew some dependence upon Ephrem, as is natural in the work of a pupil, they shew also remarkable independence.

i.e. of Mar Abbā, disciple of Mar Ephrem, from the Commentary on the Gospel. If thy right eye : i.e. if beauty that is near to thee makes thee to err, cut it off and cast it from thee ; it is profitable for thee that without thy beloved and thy administrator and burden-bearer thou shouldst enter the kingdom and not that thou and they depart into the fire. With the members whose excision is useful to us he compares the injurious friend.

A reference to the corresponding interpretation from Ephrem, printed on p. 50, will shew that this is quite an independent piece of work.

The same is true of the following extract.

(Fol. 74 b.)

דאָס וואָס אַ פּאַר אַזאַ
 אַ פּאַר אַזאַ דאָס וואָס אַ פּאַר אַזאַ

i.e. of Mar Abbā, the disciple of Mar Ephrem, from the Commentary on the Gospel. Do not give the holy to the dogs, nor cast the pearls before the swine : he calls those who mocked at the new preaching dogs and swine ; likely they were the priests and Pharisees, who after the teaching that the Apostles taught, blasphemed and imprisoned the Apostles.

Probably this will suffice to shew the difference between the Abbā Commentary and the Ephrem Commentary<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> An interesting question arises whether Abbā's Commentary was also on the Diatessaron. Our extracts include Matthew and Luke : and as it is a priori unlikely that Abbā commented on the whole series of Gospels, this is in favour of a belief that the text commented on was a Harmony. But further it will be noticed that in the second extract, the text of Matt. v. 29 is expanded by the words 'that thou shouldst enter the kingdom,' which appears to be Mark ix. 47. There seems to be

So far as Abbā is concerned, the supposition that the Commentary is the work of a pupil of Ephrem breaks down. But there remains the further question whether perhaps some other disciple may have used up his master's materials in making a Commentary. But here we are in the region of pure speculation, and had better turn back to more solid ground.

This hypothesis, that the Commentary is the work of a disciple, differs so little from that which directly ascribes the composition of the whole series of comments to Ephrem, that it may safely be left for further consideration until such time as the book is worthily edited and honoured with a scientific analysis of the method of its composition.

With this possible reservation, we may ascribe the Commentary to Ephrem, and the reader will have noticed for himself how many strands there are in the evidence for the authorship: if it was not Ephrem's work, almost the whole Syrian Church was deceived in the matter, and they were, of all people, the ones that were likely to know. On this point, then, it is superfluous to say more at present.

Nor is it necessary to multiply words with regard to the text that underlies the Commentary: for, while it is true that there is some confusion in the later Syrian fathers in the statements which they make with regard to the Diatessaron of Tatian and Ephrem's use of it, and this confusion may, perhaps, be a little more widespread than has been hitherto imagined, still, on tracing the various statements to their earliest forms, we find that all confusion disappears, and we have a consistent body of evidence as to the identification of Tatian's Harmony with the Gospel of the Meḥallete or Combined Gospels to which the Syrian fathers refer. A pretty instance of fresh evidence will be found on p. 19, where a curious reading is ascribed by one father to the Diatessaron and by another to the Meḥallete, where a comparison of the statements made will shew that the same work is intended. But it is unnecessary to spend time in elaborating the argument for the identification of the text of Tatian with that commented on by Ephrem.

I now proceed to draw attention to one or two supplementary reasons for the suggestion that Abbā was also working on the Diatessaron, even though the evidence be too slight to decide the question definitely. (Note also Evangelium in the singular number.)

matters which come up in connexion with the preceding investigation: and first of all, with regard to the extracts which Isho'dad makes from Ephrem, which are not to be found in the Commentary on the Gospel.

I find, on reference to the Questions of Isho' bar Nun on the Scriptures, of which a copy is in the S.P.C.K. collection<sup>1</sup>, that this father makes a number of solutions to the proposed difficulties in the Gospels by reference to the works of Ephrem. And two curious features present themselves; one, that he never seems to quote the Commentary of Ephrem on the Gospel; the other, that he makes a number of extracts which are very like the unidentified passages from Ephrem in the pages of Isho'dad, and appear to be derived from a common collection of Ephrem extracts. It will thus appear that Isho' bar Nun was not acquainted with the Commentary of Ephrem, or at all events had no access to a copy when he was writing his book of Questions; while, on the other hand, he had access to other matter taken from Ephrem which was of the nature of a collection of Comments on the Gospel.

For example, in the ms. referred to, we find as follows:

(Fol. 84 r.)

ܘܝܫܘܥ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ
 ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ

 ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ

This is almost exactly the quotation which we have printed on p. 23.

And the next question in Isho' bar Nun relates to a question which is discussed shortly after by Isho'dad as to the reason why Pilate's wife did not tell her dream; concerning which he remarks as follows:

ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ
 ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ ܘܢܘܢ

 ܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ

The last part of this extract agrees nearly with the closing words of Isho'dad's extract from Ephrem which we have printed on p. 23; but it is clear that Isho'dad could not have taken it directly from Isho' bar Nun.

One more instance shall be given of the use of some common collection by these two fathers :

On f. 90 r. Isho' bar Nun discourses of the Samaritan woman, as follows :

ܘܢܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ
 ܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ

 ܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ

This extract should be compared with the following from Isho'dad, fol. 259 r. ;

ܘܢܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ

 ܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ ܕܘܠܟܘܢ ܕܡܠܟܘܬܗ

The common matter in these two traditions is evident, and both writers profess to be retailing Ephrem; but it is not the Commentary that they quote, if we may judge from the Armenian.

We suspect then that both writers have access to some other

Commentary on the Gospels in which Ephrem is freely quoted, or to some collection of extracts from Ephrem.

I pass on in the next place to consider some curious coincidences between the Ephrem Commentary and the Commentaries of the Venerable Bede, which suggest that the extreme East and West are in contact at some unknown Patristic point.

In his Commentary on Luke c. 1, (ed. Giles, Vol. i. p. 280), Bede says :

Joannes ergo interpretatur in quo est gratia, vel Domini gratia.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 12. Joannes, quod nomen indicat, nos misericordia indigere.

Bede (p. 284). Et occultabat se mensibus quinque etc.... Elisabeth... de ipsis quae accipere cupiebat donis erubescit, et licet de ablato gaudeat opprobrio sterilitatis, de partu tamen anilis verecundatur aetatis.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 15 ut supra.

Bede (p. 287). De utroque potest intelligi, quod dicitur de domo David.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 16. Alio loco eadem Scriptura dixit, utrumque, Josephum et Mariam, esse ex domo David.

The interpretation of Bede coincides with that of Tatian, Ephrem, and the Sinai Syriac.

Bede (p. 293). Et intravit in domum Zachariae, et salutavit Elisabeth.... Maria ad Elisabeth, Dominus venit ad Joannem... majorumque humiliatio minorum est utique exaltatio.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 17. Maria surgens abiit ad Elisabeth, quae minor ea erat, sicut et Dominus ad Joannem venit.

Bede (p. 345). Et ne coeperitis dicere, patrem habemus Abraham, etc. Quid enim lapides... Nec immerito lapidum nomine gentes significatae sunt, quae lapides coluerunt; unde scriptum est, Similes illis fiant qui faciunt et omnes qui confidunt in eis.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 40. Ex lapidibus istis... ex adoratoribus lapidum et lignorum.

Bede (p. 346). Et notandum securim non juxta ramos positam, sed ad radicem dicit.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 39. Et perdet ramos sylvae securi, dixit Isaias. Ramos dixit, non radices.... Usque ad radicem arboris, quod Isaias praetermiserat.

Bede (p. 391). Et vidit duas naves stantes secus stagnum. Duae naves secus stagnum positae, circumcisionem et praeputium figurant.

Cf. Mösinger, p. 59. Duae naves sunt circumcisio et praeputium.

Bede (p. 393). Mergi naves est, homines in seculum, ex quo elati per fidem fuerant, morum pravitate relabi.

Cf. Mösinger (p. 59). Quibus verbis doctrina Prophetarum significatur, de excelso missa in mundum, qui per mare representatus est.

Bede (Vol. ii. p. 143). Immundus quippe spiritus exiit a Judaeis, quando acceperunt legem. Et ambulavit per loca arida quaerens sibi requiem. Expulsus, videlicet, a Judaeis, ambulavit per gentium solitudines.

Cf. Mösinger (p. 121). Quum Deus eis salvatorem misisset, qui eos educeret (sc. ex Aegypto), ille immundus aufugit et sanati sunt...Ille igitur immundus ex eis expulsus transivit per loca arida, i.e. per gentes.

An examination of the foregoing parallels will shew curious agreement in the underlying ideas, as well as actual coincidences of language and of text. The question is, What does the community of ideas imply? A reference to the sources from which Bede draws his comments will help us to take the first step in the solution of the problem. We gather from his dedicatory letter to Acca that he drew upon Ambrose, Augustine, Gregory the Great, &c. And the last named is undoubtedly responsible for a number of the sentences quoted above. For example, in Gregory's twentieth Homily on the Gospel, we find the sentence 'nec immerito lapidum nomine gentes significatae sunt, quia lapides coluerunt, unde scriptum est: Similes illis fiant qui faciunt ea et omnes qui confidunt in eis,' which is almost verbatim and literatim what we have above in Bede.

In the same Homily the words "Securim non juxta ramos positam sed ad radicem dicit" go over without change into Bede.

We may conclude that some (if not all) of the coincidence which we detect between the early Eastern and late Western commentaries is due to the use of extracts from the works of Gregory the Great. What then are the common sources of Ephrem and Gregory, or does Gregory borrow from Ephrem? This is a more difficult question to answer. But we may see some of the difficulties disappear if we observe that much of the common matter under discussion is earlier than Ephrem. For example, compare the extract from Bede, in which he explains what are the stones of which children are to be raised up to Abraham, with the following passage from Origen's 22nd Homily on Luke:

De quibus lapidibus? Non utique lapides irrationabiles corporeosque monstrabat, sed homines insensibiles et quondam duros, qui quia lapides et ligna adorabant, impletum est illud quod in psalmo cantabatur: 'Similes illis fiunt qui faciunt ea et omnes qui confidunt eis.'

The coincidence is now not one between Bede (i.e. Gregory) and Ephrem, but between Origen and Ephrem.

Now the reader has probably noticed that most of the coincidences to which we have drawn attention above are due to interpretations of a very simple character, constituting a sort of Targum on the text, like the equation between 'the two ships' and 'the two peoples,' and the like.

And it admits of demonstration that these glosses are of very high antiquity; take, for example, the explanation that the sea stands for the world, which is a favourite with Ephrem. We find the same explanation underlying the passage in Aphraates (col. 41),

Nolite haesitare, ne demergamini in mundum, velut Simon, qui cum dubitasset, demergi coepit in mare;

a passage, by the bye, which Zahn seems to us to have too hastily carried back into the Diatessaron, without detaching the gloss from the text.

We suspect then that there is a primitive Targum on the Gospel, from which this and similar glosses come: and the very same thing is suggested by such passages as that quoted on p. 72 from Moses bar Kepha, where the writer is in parallelism with Ephrem, but betrays their common source to be a succinct Commentary upon Matthew. And indeed Origen himself implies the existence of such primitive commentaries in a remarkable passage in his 34th Homily on Luke.

Aiebat quidam de presbyteris volens parabolam interpretari, hominem qui descendit esse Adam, Jerusalem paradisum; Jericho, mundum<sup>1</sup>; latrones, contrarias fortitudines; sacerdotem, legem; Levitam, prophetas; Samaritam, Christum; vulnera vero, inobedientiam; animal, corpus Domini; pandochium [id est stabulum]<sup>2</sup>, quod universos volentes introire suscipiat, Ecclesiam interpretari.

Here, then, we have an actual specimen of an early Targum; and the influence may be felt in Patristic literature. For example, Bede (ii. 126) begins his interpretation of the parable as follows:

Homo iste, Adam intelligitur in genere humano, Hierusalem, civitas pacis illa caelestis, a cujus beatitudine lapsus, in hanc mortalem miseramque vitam devenit;

and goes on plagae, peccata sunt...; jumentum ejus est caro, etc.;

through which it is easy to see the shining of the primitive interpretation.

A volume might be written on the persistence of such early elucidations.

We suspect, then, as we have said, that it is to such a primitive Targum of the Presbyters that we are to look for the explanation of many of the coincidences in interpretations and glosses between Eastern and Western, and Syrian and non-Syrian fathers. The subject is an interesting one, and demands a closer examination. For the present we content ourselves with making suggestions as to the method of pursuing the enquiry, and prophecies as to its probable result.

Since writing the foregoing lines I have seen Goussen's just published Apocalypsis Versio Sahidica, to which is appended a collection of extracts from the Diatessaron taken from a MS. of Isho'dad at Berlin (Cod. Sachau 311). Goussen adds to our collection a passage from the beginning of a Comm. on the Acts of the Apostles which gives the names of the twelve Apostles as they stood in the Diatessaron. (My copy of Isho'dad is confined to the Four Gospels.)

The extract is as follows :

כהן־גדול וְשְׁנַיִם אֲנָשִׁים מִבְּנֵי מַרְתָּא
 אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי
 אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי
 אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי
 אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי
 אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי אֶתְרֵיכְתִּיבִי an arrangement of the names which, as Zahn points out (Theol. Lit.-Blatt, Oct. 18, 1895), has influenced the text of the Lewis Codex in Matt. x.
